DOING GREAT WORK.

Pollockers Are Now Meeting with Good Returns.

Yesterday's Receipts Amounted to Half a Million Pounds.

The pollockers are doing well, and the old toast of the East Gloucester boat fishermen, "Here's hoping we'll wollop the pollock!" is being answered most satisfactorily. During October the fleet did not do much, and the season looked like a poor one, but since November came in the situation has changed and big trips have been the rule and not the exception. As the season does not end until Thanksgiving, there is now every indication of a big catch.

Prices have ruled high, and although they dropped 10 cents yesterday, is still very good.

Yesterday was the banner pollock day thus far, although the morning gave no sign of what was in store. About the middle of the afternoon the vessels began to come in and before the influx was over, the dealers had about 500,000 pounds awaiting their offers. The demand was good, so the crafts did not have to lie around long, but soon hauled in and took out.

Sch. Edward A. Rich, Capt. James Goodwin, had the biggest trip of the year, 74,000 pounds. The going price at present is 80 cents per hundred pounds.

LOBSTER SMACK BURNED.

Gasolene Takes Fire and Destroys Portland Craft.

The lobster smack Willie T. burned and sank off the Maine coast Monday night. Capt. A. S. Sproul and Isaac Poole, who were on board, were in great danger for some time.

The smack was supplied with a gasolene engine, and at 9 o'clock a fire started close by it, and despite the best efforts of the two men, it spread rapidly. Fearing an explosion, they took to their dory. They had no time to remove anything, and Capt. Sproul lost $150 in money and all his things. The fire lighted up the sea for miles, and it was supposed here that a steamer was burning.

The craft was valued at $900 and her freight consisted of 3600 lobsters valued at $500.

FIND NO MACKEREL.

A Number of the Seining Fleet at Halifax Yesterday.

A despatch from Halifax says that Capt. Solomon Jacobs' steam seiner, the Alice M. Jacobs, the schooners Indiana and Carrie W. Babson and other Gloucester fishing vessels, which put in there yesterday morning, report no success in the mackerel fishing this trip so far. Capt. Jacobs will go from Halifax to the Cape Breton coast.

BLACKFISH IN CAPE COD BAY.

First Appearance of Big Mammals Since 1884.

A dispatch from Provincetown says that after an absence of 18 years, that species of cetacean known as the pilot whale, or blackfish, has returned to its old feeding ground in Cape Cod Bay.

The mammoth creatures for years paid an annual visit and Provincetown whale fishermen reaped a rich harvest. But in November, 1884, the boatmen of Provincetown and Wellfleet came upon the greatest school of pilot whales ever found gathered in convention off the Wellfleet shore, and they took position just to seaward of the herd and frightened the mammals into rushing straight for the beach. A few burst through the cordon of boats arranged off the shore, and fled seaward to safety, but 1600 of the herd, nearly all, in fact, were captured. A month or two later a herd of 500 was caught gambolling off the shore of Barnstable by Provincetown hunters, and these died in a similar manner.
